

An initial inspection study with radiography is scheduled two months after the procedure. At the moment the hip is often smooth. Sometimes you experience a slight limping: this lack of strength is strongly dependent on the condition before the operation. This should not be a reason for panic: the body will gradually adapt to your artificial hip.

A second inspection will follow five months after the operation. You do not need to make a new radiograph, you will bring the previous radiography.

In the longer term, a triennial check is useful to follow the evolution by means of radiographs.
